TikTok is not the only app by ByteDance that requires its users to pay for certain features. One example of this is the subscription function for WeChat, a popular messaging service in China and certain other countries. This has led to some people being very concerned about ByteDance's business practices and whether or not it is fair for people to be required to pay for all of the features that are offered on TikTok's platform. In addition, critics have noted that these subscription fees may be used by ByteDance to influence user behaviour and/or monitor users' activities in order to find out what content they are interested in and why they are interested in it. For example, it is possible that people might be required to subscribe to TikTok in order to listen to certain types of music which ByteDance wants people to hear.",

In May 2021, TikTok launched a version of their app specifically for China called Douyin (Chinese: 抖音). The app is not available in China App Store or Google Play Store easily but is downloadable for Android users via third-party apps and has a separate iOS app store listing. The Chinese version features some localized content such as the ability to search event hosts by their name in situations like Line Walker. The app is also available in English, unlike its International counterpart with the English version being used by people who want to practice their Chinese.",

In November 2021, the company was served with a subpoena by the United States Copyright Office, which requested details about any content that was deleted due to copyright concerns and related information. This data was then analyzed by two students at Harvard Business School who found that on average, 1 out of every 10 videos uploaded via TikTok were protected by copyright. The study also found that over a one-month period (from October 14 - November 12), about 45% of all videos uploaded on TikTok were originally created by someone other than the uploaders. In a statement to "The New York Times", a spokesman for Tencent said that they were aware of the copyright issues and has appointed a member of their legal team to "actively" address the problem. They have also been working on improving the security and safety measures around the app.",
